What are the reasons for never missing Visa pour l'Image?

- Because Perpignan is the annual forum where photojournalists from around the world meet.
- Because photojournalists are the men and women crafting the freedom of expression which is essential for us in our quest for truth.
- Because there is excitement in Perpignan.

And that has been the case for the past twenty-four years.

Yes, photography, now digital and immediate, has power as a major means of expression capable of leaving a mark on our subconscious. Photography is not just the message presented, but also the expression of a culture, an experience and a feeling.

Since the beginning of the year, Marie Colvin, Gilles Jacquier, Rémi Ochlik and others have fallen victim to man's inhumanity to man, because they were journalists who believed in freedom of information in defiance of tyrants and their reprehensible freedom to do evil.

In the midst of war and conflict, of financial crisis, debt and unemployment, when established values and guidance fade, in this world which is being destroyed, we want to understand who is responsible, who will be accountable.

Only freedom of the press with a large and broad range of media and views can save us from a return to the dark ages, save us from fundamentalism and everything that comes with it, doing so by presenting the work of photojournalists.

Visa pour l'Image is in line with developments in new technologies, in the written press, TV, video and the Web 2.0 offering ever more content, and that means we must be even more careful when making our selections.

Special thanks go to Jean-François Leroy and his team working on the Festival, helping build its success, exporting the name of Visa pour l'Image-Perpignan, together with the Festival exhibitions and values, across the world.

And thank-you to all the visitors too for your loyalty: in 2011, we had 208 000 entries to exhibitions and more than 20 000 viewers.

Thank-you all for your support – sponsors, partners and public authorities – as you help us provide you, the visitors, the general public, with the Festival, and all of it free of charge.

Visa pour l'Image is an event with real commitment, and no matter what the news story is, the Festival will continue to defend freedom of expression and respect for fundamental human values in a spirit of tolerance.

Yet another year of change?

On October 5, 2011, the death of Steve Jobs dominated the news, overshadowing the death of Göksin Sipahioglu; yet he was the man, with Hubert Henrotte and Jean Monteux, behind the formidable success of the three "A"s - Gamma, Sygma and Sipa - the three that made Paris the international capital of photojournalism. But those times are long past; they are now a source of deep nostalgia.

On January 11, 2012, Gilles Jacquier, a feature reporter for the TV program Envoyé Spécial broadcast by France 2, was killed in Homs, under circumstances that are far from transparent.

February 22, 2012, once again in Homs, Syria, targeted shooting killed Rémi Ochlik and Marie Colvin (a feature journalist for the Sunday Times). International opinion reached emotional heights, but there was no action.

In late April 2012, a picture editor was fired by the paper where he had been working for six years. The reason given by HR management was: "Your job doesn't exist any more." They then promptly recruited a young picture assistant paid little more than the minimum wage because: "We don't need a guy who knows the whole history of photography."

A tweet* sent out a few weeks ago seems particularly apposite: "Twitter makes you think you are a personality, Instagram makes you think you are a photographer, and Facebook makes you think you have friends. It's going to be hard when reality hits!" We are still (Alas!) receiving dozens of Hipstamatic reports. And we'd only just got over the Lomo craze!

An amazing year! Fortunately we can still find what we like. There are incredible reports, extraordinary first-hand stories, moving tales - telling the tale of the world as it is.

Welcome to Visa pour l'Image!

Jean-François Leroy

PALAIS DES CONGRÈS

2e Bureau and Images Evidence will be based at the Palais des Congrès - Maison du Festival - where you can collect badges and press kits, find information and more.

Press Center

Tuesday, September 4 to Saturday evening, September 8.

Press agencies and photographers' collectives from around the world have booths and desks on the second floor.

Canon, our main partner, is on the ground floor of the Palais des Congrès.

Our partner, iTribu - Apple Premium Reseller, will be pleased to see you on the 1st floor of the Palais des Congrès. A special area offering advice and demonstrations will feature the Apple range for both professional and individual users.

Reuters Digital Space will be pleased to see you on the 1st floor.

Central Dupon, photographic lab and long-standing partner, will be pleased to see you on the 2nd floor.

Meet the Photographers

Monday, September 3 to Saturday, September 8

The meetings are open to both professionals and the general public, and are held every morning in the Charles Trenet auditorium. The program for the meetings will be published on the Website: www.visapourlimage.com

ELLE Round Table Discussion

Friday, September 7, 5pm. Charles Trenet Auditorium, Palais des Congrès. Free entrance.

Have women been betrayed by the Arab revolutions?

Islamists in power in Egypt, a Salafist threat in Tunisia, sharia law introduced in Libya, and arrests and torture in Syria. Eighteen months after the Arab Spring which saw women playing an active role in the uprisings, half of the population appears to have been sacrificed by history. Have women's aspirations for democracy and equality faded? Can sharia law be reconciled with women's rights? How will women organize and stand up for themselves?

The subject will be debated by specialists from different domains, together with women from Tunisia, Egypt and Libya.

The ELLE panel discussion will be moderated by Valérie Toranian, editor, and Caroline Laurent-Simon, feature reporter.

CHAPITRE Bookshop, the official bookshop at Visa pour l'Image - Perpignan

SCREENING: Cultures of Résistance

a film by lara Lee (Caipirinha Productions)

Wednesday, September 5 - 3.00-4.30pm

Badge mandatory - English version with subtitles in French

Does every move really make a difference? Can music and dance be weapons for peace?
In 2003, just before the war in Iraq, the film-maker lara Lee set off on a journey in a bid to understand an increasingly war-torn world, a world which she believed was heading for self-destruction. Her travels took her to five continents where, over a number of years, she met more and more people devoting their lives to the quest for change. This is their story. Through Iran, as far as Brazil and finally Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon: Cultures of Resistance is an exploration of the way art and creativity can be turned into munitions when waging the battle for peace and justice.

SCREENING: Under fire: Journalists in Combat

Thursday, September 6, 2012 - 4.00-6.00 p.m

After the presentation, Anthony Feinstein will be happy to answer to your questions.

Badge mandatory - In English only

Under fire: Journalists in Combat explores the psychological reactions of frontline journalists to the dangers and stress of their work. The film is based on research by Professor Anthony Feinstein (University of Toronto) who, over the past ten years, has conducted a number of landmark studies defining the types of psychological difficulties which journalists may develop after decades of exposure to war.
The documentary focuses on conditions such as post-traumatic stress disorder, depression and substance abuse.

The journalists interviewed are Christina Lamb (Sunday Times), Jeremy Bowen (BBC), Anthony
Loyd (The Times), Paul Watson (Pulitzer award winner: LA Times and Toronto Star), Susan
Ormiston (Canadian Broadcasting Corporation), Finbarr O'Reilly (Thomson Reuters), Jon
Steele (ITN) and Ian Stewart (formerly West Africa Bureau Chief for Associated Press).

Interspersed amongst the interviews are excerpts of archival footage of conflicts covered by the journalists, including the wars in Iraq, Afghanistan, Sierra Leone, the Balkans and Chechnya.

The documentary was short-listed for a 2012 Academy Award.

Director: Martyn Burke.

Producer: Anthony Feinstein.

Executive Producer: Laura Morton

JEAN-CLAUDE ROLLAND ROOM

SEMINAR: Observatoire du photojournalisme

Wednesday, September 5, 2012 - 5pm.

Badge mandatory - In french only

The Observatoire du photojournalisme [Photojournalism Observatory], which was set up by the French Ministry of Culture & Communication in November 2011, issued a progress report in June on the first stages of its work. Issues covered included the question of the status of photojournalists, new opportunities available through transmedia, new ways of financing productions, measures to help professional photojournalists move ahead and change as new developments and channels emerge, as well as initiatives to raise the awareness of the general public to press photography and its specific features. The seminar, with Jacques Hémon, president of the Observatory, and Daniel Barroy, head of the photography section, will provide a forum for professional photojournalists to respond to the proposals in the progress report and to present their own ideas on issues seen as critical for the future not only of photojournalism, but also of the press in general working to provide independent news coverage and a wide range of opinions.

Transmission pour l'Image is unlike any other workshop. It is complete immersion for three days with six of the world's leading photographers and picture editors. It is a forum for meeting people and for discussion, and, most importantly, it is for "transmission" with the generation of photojournalists who have been part of the adventure of Visa pour l'Image passing on and sharing their knowledge and experience with the next generation.

Transmission is not a course on how to "take photos" - quite the opposite. As part of a group of no more than 8 or 10 persons, you will have a special working relationship by being in contact with professionals who will take the time to talk about their work and the choices they have made, who will explain how they have produced, chosen, published and sold pictures.

In the course of the three days you will be with these contacts at different moments, sometimes for a drink or lunch, or attending evening shows, and there will be opportunities to meet many people in the professional world of photography.

"Transmission means special contacts and meetings; it's the possibility of discussing matters with a small number of people, with the guest professionals; it's an opportunity to see and understand how photographers, picture editors and even agency directors manage to work together on an everyday basis."

And when Visa pour l'Image is over, you still have the phone numbers and you can make good use of them. In the months after I took part, I called two of the workshop professionals. The first one got me a few jobs and the second one advised me to go and see IP3 Press (where I now am), and he's also become a friend."

Benjamin Girette, photographer, IP3 Press, and participant in Transmission pour l'Image in 2010

The atmosphere is friendly and informal, helping young photojournalists take on and carry on the values that are the basic principles which Visa pour l'Image has always believed in.

PROFESSIONALS

Jérôme Delay is in charge of the Transmission workshops.

Jérôme is the chief photographer/Africa for Associated Press, based in Johannesburg, and has been covering international news for thirty years.

His guests for Transmission in 2012 are:

Jon Jones

Picture Editor of the Sunday Times Magazine, who established his reputation reporting in war zones and who has also made documentaries for the BBC.

Chris Morris

Chris barely needs to be introduced. We remember, for example, his coverage of the Balkans and his work on the US elections. He is one of the founding partners of the agency VII.

Joao Silva

Joao Silva, who was seriously injured in Afghanistan in October 2010, was a member of the famous Bang-Bang Club and has covered many wars and conflicts over the past twenty years. He is a staff photographer with the New York Times.

Patrick Chauvel

The war photographer, documentary filmmaker and writer who started as a young man in Vietnam and has continued through to Libya, covering many wars and conflicts, producing extensive photographic and documentary coverage.

He has written two books on his experience: Rapporteur de guerre [War Reporter] (2003) and Sky (2005).

Peter Bouckaert

Director of Human Rights Watch and an expert in humanitarian crises. Peter is a "veteran" with the experience of fact-finding missions in Lebanon, Kosovo, Chechnya, Afghanistan, Iraq, Israel, Macedonia, Indonesia, Uganda and Sierra Leone. He has spoken and given testimony on war crimes to the US Senate, the Council of Europe and the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) in the Hague. He has written opinion pieces for media around the world and been published in magazines and daily newspapers such as Rolling Stone and The Washington Post.

Evening Screenings

Monday, September 3 to Saturday, September 9, 9:45pm at Campo Santo.

September 6 to 8: simultaneous screening on the Place
de la République.

The Visa pour l'Image evening shows will cover the main events of the past year, from September 2011 to August 2012. Every evening, from Monday to Saturday, the program will begin with a chronological review of the news stories, two months at a time. This is followed by reports and features on society, wars, stories that have made the news and others that have been kept quiet, plus coverage of the state of the world today. Visa pour l'Image also presents retrospectives on major events and figures in history. The Visa pour l'Image award ceremonies are held during the evening shows.

Featuring in the 2012 Festival program (subjects may change)

News stories of the year across the continents:

war, crises, politics, strange and remarkable events, sport, culture, science, the environment etc.

India, Burma, Turkey, Israel/Palestine, Romania, the Dominican Republic & Haiti, New Guinea, Colombia, Mexico, Argentina, Afghanistan, Pakistan, China; plus Indignados around the world, the food crisis in Africa with war, desertification and undernourishment, the European far right, anger in Greece, migrants in Italy, the presidential election campaign in France and more.

A review of the main news stories in 2011. One year on, what has happened with the Arab revolutions? One year after the tsunami, how is Japan rebuilding?

Tributes

Video Books

Retrospectives:

Twenty years ago war broke out in Bosnia and Herzegovina. A review of war in the former Yugoslavia.

A History of Syria from 1920 to the present.

Fifty years ago: Independence for Algeria.

One hundred years ago, the Titanic made its first and last voyage.

Visa d'or 2012

The 2012 Arthus-Bertrand Visa d'or awards will go to the best reports published between September 2011 and August 2012

TROPHIES DESIGNED AND MADE BY THE ARTHUS-BERTRAND WORKSHOPS

VISA D'OR DAILY PRESS AWARD

The Visa d'or Daily Press award will be presented during the evening show on Wednesday, September 5, 2012.

Since 1990, the Visa d'or Daily Press award has been given for the best report published in the daily press, in any country in the world, in the course of the previous year.

The prize is open to all daily newspapers around the world.

For the first time, the Communauté d'Agglomération Perpignan Méditerranée will be funding the prize of €8000 for the Visa d'or Daily Press award winner. Reports selected by the jury are exhibited at the Festival (28 entries in 2011).

For the fifth time, the Languedoc-Roussillon Region will be funding the prize of €8000 for the Visa d'or Feature award winner.

VISA D'OR NEWS AWARD

Presentation of the Visa d'or News award on Saturday, September 8, 2012.

For the fifth time, Paris Match will be giving a prize of €8000 to the Visa d'or News award winner.

HUMANITARIAN VISA D'OR AWARD - INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE OF THE RED CROSS (ICRC)

The 2012 winner of the ICRC Humanitarian Visa d'or award, sponsored by the SANOFI ESPOIR Foundation, is Mani, for his work in Homs (Syria), showing the extremely vulnerable state of emergency care services there. Mani will be presented with the award during the evening show in Perpignan on Thursday, September 6, 2012.

The award is open to professional photojournalists.

It is designed to highlight the need for respect for medical missions conducted in situations of armed conflict and violence. The jury pays special attention to reports showing violence targeting relief staff and persons injured and ill, as well as medical vehicles and facilities (hospitals, clinics and pharmacies).

2011 winner: Catalina Martin-Chico / Cosmos.

The ICRC was founded in Geneva in 1863 for the purpose of providing assistance and protection for people in times of armed conflict and other situations of violence. The ICRC operates in some sixty countries.

CITY OF PERPIGNAN RÉMI OCHLIK AWARD

Rémi Ochlik was killed in Homs, Syria, on February 22 this year. His work on Haiti was featured as a screening at Campo Santo in 2004. For us, the concept of a young photographer - a talented young photographer - was synonymous with the name of Rémi Ochlik. The mayor of Perpignan, Jean-Marc Pujol, therefore considered that the city's award should be renamed the City of Perpignan Rémi Ochlik Award.

Picture editors from international magazines (see list above) will choose the best young reporter for the City of Perpignan Rémi Ochlik award which is being presented for the seventh time.

The members of the jury will select the young photographer who, in their opinion, has produced the best report, either published or unpublished in 2011/2012. The work is featured as an exhibition at Visa pour l'Image-Perpignan 2012.

The City of Perpignan sponsors the prize of €8000. The award will be presented at the evening show on Friday, September 7.

The 2012 winner is Sebastián Liste / Reportage by Getty Images for his report on the community living in a disused chocolate factory in the center of Salvador de Bahia, Brazil, and featured as an exhibition at Visa pour l'Image 2012.

CANON FEMALE PHOTOJOURNALIST AWARD

PRESENTED BY THE
FRENCH ASSOCIATION
OF FEMALE JOURNALISTS
(AFJ - ASSOCIATION DES FEMMES JOURNALISTES) IN PARTNERSHIP WITH LE
FIGARO MAGAZINE.

For the twelfth consecutive year, Canon France and the AFJ will present the Canon Female Photojournalist Award. Entrants will be judged on both previous work and plans for a future project. The 2012 award winner, Sarah Caron, will receive the prize (€8000) during the final evening show for 2012, on Saturday, September 8, for her project on Pashtun women in Pakistan.

Previous award winners are: Magali Delporte (2001), Sophia Evans (2002), Ami Vitale (2003), Kristen Ashburn (2004), Claudia Guadarrama (2005), Véronique de Viguerie (2006), Axelle de Russé (2007), Brenda Ann Kenneally (2008), Justyna Mielnikiewicz (2009) and Martina Bacigalupo (2010). An exhibition of the 2011 winner, Ilvy Njiokiktjien, will feature her report on Afrikaner teenagers in post-Apartheid South Africa as part of the official program.

ANI / PIXPALACE AWARD

For the past twelve years, the ANI (Association Nationale des Iconographes) has been organizing presentations of portfolios during the professional week at the International Festival of Photojournalism, Visa pour l'Image - Perpignan, and has now helped more than 300 photographers from a wide range of backgrounds, providing guidance and advice. At the end of the festival, the ANI forms a jury to select three award winners, chosen because their work has really made an impression. For 2012, the third year, one winner will receive an ANI award with prize money of €5000, sponsored by PixPalace, to encourage and support the photographer. The award will be presented during the evening show on Wednesday, September 5.

The award-winner's work will be displayed at the 2012 "Visas de l'ANI" exhibition at the Galerie du Bar Floréal in Paris.

GETTY IMAGES GRANTS FOR EDITORIAL PHOTOGRAPHY

Getty Images will be announcing its eighth annual Grants program at the 2012 festival, Visa pour l'Image - Perpignan. Launched in 2005, the goal of the grants program is to enable photographers to bring attention to significant social and cultural issues, as well as to take new and inspiring strides in creative work.

An additional feature this year will be the partnership with the Chris Hondros Fund, offering a new grant for the best coverage of a major news story over the past year. Having already empowered over 40 photojournalists to bring eye-opening visual essays to the world's attention, Getty Images will be announcing the winners, first at the evening screening on Thursday, September 6, followed by the Grants Showcase presenting the award-winning projects on Friday, September 7, at 3pm in the Jean-Claude Rolland auditorium (Palais des Congrès).

PIERRE & ALEXANDRA BOULAT AWARD

After a hiatus of one year, the Pierre & Alexandra Boulat Award is back, with support from Canon France

The award helps a photographer carry out an original reporting project.

The award winner Maciek Nabrdalik / VII, will be presented with the prize of €8000 during the evening show on Thursday, September 6, 2012. The award is for a report on economic migration in Europe.

Education Week

September 17 to 21

© Jean-Pierre Laffont

The exhibitions will remain open from September 17 to 21 for educational groups (on appointment). In 2011, nearly 8000 students, both secondary and tertiary, came from all parts of France and also Spain to visit the exhibitions with guided visits and comments provided by figures from the world of photography. The same approach has been scheduled for this year.

Guest "guides" commenting on the 2012 exhibitions are:

Christophe Bertolin

Christophe has always been fascinated by pictures, and after two years working as an IT person for Gaz de France, he decided to give it all up and follow his heart. To become a photographer, he enrolled in a three-year course at the lcart Photo School; and he topped his year. He was promptly taken up by a press agency and stayed for two years. He wanted to develop his own vision of what images could be, so, in 2005, Christophe, together with Rémi Ochlik, founded the agency IP3 Press which now has eight photographers. He then wished to go beyond photography, so embarked on video and new technologies, setting up Stratosphere Production, specializing in aerial shooting from a drone.

Bénédicte Kurzen

Bénédicte (aged 32) is a free-lance photographer based in Johannesburg, South Africa. She has spent the last seven years working on Africa and has had her work published in many publications and media. She was a participant in the Joop Swart Masterclass in 2009.

© Elisa Migda / Visa pour l'Image - Perpignan

Bertrand Gaudillère

Bertrand Gaudillère (born in 1973) is a founding member of the collective Item which was set up in 2001 in the city of Lyon, to produce and distribute his work on social and political issues in France. Since 2007, he has been interested in migrants, in the question of persons without residential permits, adopting an approach that is the antithesis of spectacular events that regularly make news stories, attempting to show the everyday life of people usually referred to as "illegals" and who are often cited simply as statistics, percentages and expulsions.

Pierre Terdjman

Pierre Terdjman (aged 32) is a French photographer who settled in Paris in 2007 as a staff photographer with the agency Gamma, after working previously for the left-wing Israeli daily, Haaretz. His work has included reports on post-election violence in Kenya, the Russia-Georgia conflict, Afghanistan where he spent a year reporting on the life of a French brigade there for Paris Match, and the destruction wrought by the earthquake in Haiti. Most recently he reported on the Arab Spring, covering the fall of Ben Ali in Tunisia, Mubarak in Egypt, and fighting against Gaddafi and his regime in Libya. His pictures are often seen in Paris Match, Newsweek, the New York Times, and GQ Magazine. He is with the agency Cosmos.

North Korea

North Korea, one of the world's most secretive countries, invited hundreds of foreign journalists to witness celebrations in April to mark the 100th anniversary of the birth of leader Kim Il-sung, and the launch of a rocket considered by the US and its allies to be a cover for a ballistic missile test.

Pedro Ugarte and Ed Jones described their experience of the hard-line communist state as "traveling back in time."

"There was always someone there to watch you... It was well near impossible to find out what people were thinking," said Pedro, who is photo director for Asia. "And because there is so little access for journalists, we felt duty bound to take as many photos as possible... On a five to six hour train trip, we spent all the time snapping away through the window, feeling guilty if we eased up for five minutes."

Ed Jones felt pressure competing against so many big-name photographers. The scenes he best remembers came on the final day, in Pyongyang, when hundreds of dancers took part in a mass spectacle in Kim Il-jung Square. "Photographers were in the stands, but towards the end we were able to go down and mix with the dancers on the square. It was an incredible experience to be surrounded by a perfectly choreographed crowd of dancers, acrobats and circus performers, beneath huge portraits of the leader. You had no idea which way to point your camera."

The Shock Wave in Greece

Greece, on the verge of bankruptcy, has had three bailouts from the European Union and the International Monetary Fund, but the drastic austerity measures demanded of the government have made it even more difficult for the people of the country to cope as jobs are lost and wages, salaries and pensions slashed. Over weeks and months, the Greeks have taken to the streets in protest, expressing their outrage, anger and complete opposition to budget cuts; some have called for the country to leave the eurozone, or pull out of the European Union. The atmosphere has been tense, reaching crisis levels, and protests have spread. Police and demonstrators have clashed, even in the heart of Athens, in Syntagma Square, with battles waged using stones, Molotov cocktails and teargas as weapons.

Louisa Gouliamaki, Angelos Tzortzinis and Aris Messinis have covered the events, every day, in the thick of the action, sometimes trapped between police and demonstrators.

The photos show scenes of violence, surreal visions of police and protesters engulfed in plumes of smoke, plus pictures of needy migrants waiting at a soup kitchen, and ordinary people rushing for food being given away by farmers.

"It's tough on both sides, for protestors and police," says Louisa (43), who believes that no one in Greece knows how far things will go.

"If you want to see everything, you have to be in the middle of it, between police and protestors, but there is the risk of being hit and from either side," notes Angelos (28) who was only ten meters away from the action when he took the shot of the policeman being struck by a Molotov cocktail.

Aris (35) chief photographer with AFP's Athens bureau, and who covered the Arab Spring in Libya, fears that protests may get worse: "Now everyone is becoming violent. You even see older people throwing stones."

All three photographers have won international awards for their coverage of Greece (POYi 2012, CHIPP 2011 & 2012, and Fotoweb).

Guantanamo

Incarceration is a damning condition. Disappearing into a silent web of turmoil and confinement in which there is accusation and physical and mental brutality with no recourse to escape or the ability to prove innocence is a terrifying circumstance for many in the world. During the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq, large numbers of people were detained and held at prisons in the two countries and around the globe: victims of the War on Terror that ostensibly targeted fanatics, but which often swept up the innocent. The casualties of unjust arrest and detainment were many; a frightening status indelibly recorded by photographs showing the spectacular cruelty of jailers in Abu Ghraib and of prisoners in the cargo holds of US planes in Afghanistan. And there is the terrifying act of rendition. For every scene of torture captured in a photograph, there are the numberless people who simply vanished without a trace.

The subject of Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, may conjure up images of grainy Interpol mugshots and hooded detainees, but Mathias Braschler and Monika Fischer have created sensitive and revealing portraits of those imprisoned as part of the War on Terror. The body of work is deeply psychological and compelling, both shocking and absorbing, presenting individuals who were deliberately dehumanized. The portraits show remarkable presence, the presence of men reclaiming the identity once lost and misunderstood, leaving only a piercing stare recalling the traumatic experience of incarceration.

DAILY PRESS

Arsenal des Carmes

Since 1990, Visa pour l'Image is inviting the Daily International Press. Those who inform us day by day exhibit the current news of the previous year. 26 dailies will present their best reports. One of those dailies will be awarded with the Visa d'or «Arthus-Bertrand» - category Daily Press - during the evening on Wednesday, September 5, 2012.
For the first time, the Communauté d'Agglomération Perpignan Méditerranée will be funding the prize of €8000 for the Visa d'or Daily Press award winner.

Intimité

Being a contented member of an audience may not be as easy as it seems.

It might be thought that all an audience needs is to attend and enjoy the performance. I do not believe that things work that way; there may have to be a certain mindset or alertness. The pleasure felt and the successful experience of an audience will depend on both the quality of the performance on stage and the active involvement of the spectator's mind and imagination, the level of individual awareness and responses triggered in the emotional memory.

Jean-Louis Fernandez was a photographer before being a spectator, but the revelation of his gifts in both areas saw him become a photographer of stage performances.

Today he is one of the leading photographers of live performances, and the special relationship he has with a performance is no doubt what makes his pictures so intense and unique.

His photos are quite unlike any others: he recomposes the work presented on stage, being involved as a spectator while also creating his own original work. His professional eye will choose the element on stage that will trigger the emotional response he felt when watching the performance. The special quality of his photography, as recognized by the artists concerned, is that his images convey what a spellbound audience most appreciated in the artists. His view enhances the stage. As he is part of the realm of the performing arts, he can mix with the artists and troupes, being close at hand, at all times, in all situations in and around the performance: rehearsals, preparation, coming back to earth after the show, during moments of relaxation and discussions when artists talk amongst themselves or with members of the audience.

Jean-Louis Fernandez is very tall, yet it is always a surprise to spot him as he moves around with his camera, there, close by. He can vanish, merge into the group, and people will just let him be there, pointing the camera at them, but never invasively.

And so he can continue, working on, even when the artists need to be alone, in private, recording images no audience has ever seen: the moment when the actor or dancer will look into the mirror in search of the character; or find the momentum needed for the role, and the surge just before stepping on stage.

Artists do not look at themselves in his camera as if they were looking in a mirror; they tackle the observing, recording eye that can register the impression, the eye of the partner who is part of their world, the eye of the camera, the eye willingly allowed to see such inner moments, the moment when the human being is abandoned and shifts into creative expression.

It is breathtaking to see a split second transcending time, when the entire essence of a living being will glow.

Kurdistan People with No Rights, but Anger

The Kurdish people who, for more than two thousand years, have been living in the lands of Anatolia and Persia, have their own unique history. Their land exists: it is Kurdistan, extending from the Anatolian plateau and plains to the Zagros mountains, but the borders of this vast land have never been recognized by any State. The ancient language of Kurdish, with Indo-European roots, is related to Persian and quite distinct from Arabic and Turkish, and has developed, creating several dialects, despite harsh persecution of communities speaking the language. The civilization passed down from the ancient Kurds has produced a thriving culture which, at different times, has been influenced by Persian, Arabic and Ottoman civilizations, and has combined the religions of Zoroastrianism and Islam; but it has always remained the culture of a repressed "ethnic minority." There is a land, a language and a culture, yet today, in the early 21st century, the 40 million Kurds of the Middle East now form the largest population of stateless persons in the world.

With the journalist, Olivier Piot, we traveled the lands of Kurdistan in a bid to understand this paradox of history. We explored Kurdish towns and villages in Syria, Iraq and Turkey, and encountered Kurds from Iran now living in exile. Over a total of twelve journeys, we observed lifestyles, listened to hopes and dreams, and heard of the frustration and suffering of these "forgotten people". Everywhere we went, the Kurds we met conveyed the same feeling: the sense of belonging to a population that has been "sacrificed" by history. While they are certainly not the only victims of this kind, the history of the Kurds over the centuries, ranging from the great Ottoman and Persian empires to the birth of modern nations, has been a relentless series of human dramas and political deadlocks. In the 20th century in particular, when this region of the world was weakened a number of times and saw its geopolitical map redrawn, the Kurds have never managed to gain recognition of their land and rights. Almost one century after the promise made by the Allied powers in 1920 to establish a "Great Kurdistan" in the Middle East, a promise never kept, the Kurds are still struggling to achieve this goal. With the exception of Iraq with a Kurdish autonomous region in the north of the country since 1992, this is an ongoing struggle of an entire people, fighting for their rights – the right to their identity and the right to democracy.

Standing at the Graveyards of E-waste

My quest following the e-waste trail began by accident while in Uummannaq, Greenland, in November 2010, standing on cliffs overlooking icebergs. I could see the results of our modern-day throw-away society: discarded junk, computers, dishwashers, washing machines, televisions, stereos, office supplies, toilets, trucks and cars - junk, past and present colliding into the future. The waste had come from the former Soviet Union, Western and Eastern Europe, and Asia; big cargo ships were bringing it and dumping it at the land's end in Greenland. The world was poisoning Greenland. The waste was from some of the biggest polluters in the world. The question I asked was simple: had society in its mad drive in the so-called interest of modernization, been polluting the Earth with no care for the future and for generations who will inherit the Earth? We have a "Let's live for today" attitude, get rich and grow fat, being comfortable and losing the moral compass; and in the process we are destroying the world. That very cold day in Greenland, watching icebergs melt because of global warming, I began to wonder how many devices and appliances my friends and others had acquired over their lifetime? How many computers? How many cell phones? How many TV sets? How many iPods?

After some research, I discovered that according to estimates there were more than one billion computer users in the world, and more than 4.6 billion cell phone users. The average life span of a computer is three to five years, and for an iPhone, it is only two years. As technology moves ahead in leaps and bounds, older versions of electronic equipment become obsolete and are replaced. Less than one year after the overwhelmingly successful launch of the iPad, a new version came out, and within one month, thirty million iPad 2 units had been sold.

With such demand, it is no surprise that we generate 20 to 50 million tons of e-waste every year.

The quantity of e-waste is staggering; it has wreaked ecological havoc and destroyed millions of families whose work is to recover whatever can be salvaged - at great risk to their health and life.

Following the e-waste trail began as a question, but over time the inquiry became a photographic documentary journey covering three continents and 60 228 kilometers, tracking the afterlife of electronic trash. At the same time, corporations and governments continue to make irresponsible yet lucrative deals, causing enormous damage to the world's most vulnerable citizens.

E-waste contains toxic agents such as polychlorinated biphenyls (PCB), copper, lead, zinc, gold, iron, thallium and mercury. Lead, which is found in computer monitors and television sets, has a poisonous effect on the central nervous system, gradually attacking the brain, and highly toxic levels can cause paralysis. Cadmium, a major component in certain batteries and circuit boards, causes cancer; mercury affects the brain and central nervous system; and PCB is a dioxin associated with birth defects.

In electronic waste graveyards, the land, air and water have reached unprecedented levels of toxic pollution. Skin ulcers have been reported in children swimming in nearby rivers and streams; and dioxins, some of the most toxic chemicals known to science, have been found in breast milk. The crisis is here, now, and is daunting. Problems often seen in developing countries, such as waste disposal, poverty and violence, are being made even worse by the problem of e-waste.

For me, personally, the sad reality is that the more "civilized" we become, the more barbaric is our behavior towards our fellow humans.

Condemned - Mental Health in African Countries in Crisis

© Mads Noergaard

Wars, famines and natural disasters leave not only the dead to be buried but also survivors to go on living. While many come through crises with their bodies intact, the same cannot always be said of their minds.

Over the last fifty years, sub-Saharan Africa has seen more of these crises than any other region in the world. Their legacy is mental illness on a grand scale and few resources to treat it.

Conflicts and disasters divert funds away from health and education. For the mentally disabled, hospitals can become prisons and ignorance can result in stigma and neglect. Care often involves forcible restraint in both institutions and homes. The mentally ill are often accused of being possessed, or branded as witches. Spiritual healers are regularly called on to "deliver" them. Chained and sometimes starved to avoid "feeding the demon inside," they are truly cursed, not by God but by their communities, by society. There is arguably no group more neglected or vulnerable than the mentally ill and mentally disabled in African countries suffering from or recovering from disaster.

For this self-funded project, Robin Hammond traveled to the jungles of the Democratic Republic of Congo to document the mental scarring of those grieving for the millions killed and the psychological impact on hundreds of thousands of survivors of sexual violence. He documented the legacy of civil war in Sudan, photographing the mentally ill and mentally disabled locked away in Juba Central Prison.

To record the effects of displacement and malnutrition on the mind, he stayed in Dadaab, the world's biggest refugee camp, where Somalis fleeing conflict and famine have sought safety. Hammond took photographs in bombed out streets and refugee camps in Somalia where, according to the World Health Organization, after twenty years of war, one in three citizens suffer from severe mental illness.

He went to Uganda where unspeakable violence at the hands of the Lord's Resistance Army has caused deep psychological problems and left tens of thousands of children traumatized after killing as child soldiers.

He discovered people abandoned by their governments, the aid community, and society at large: a voiceless minority relegated to dark forgotten corners in churches, chained to rusty hospital beds, spending their lives behind bars in filthy prisons - lives condemned to misery.

Massoud Hossaini's "girl in green", the 10-year-old survivor of a suicide bombing in Kabul, seen on front pages around the world, earned him a Pulitzer Prize, a World Press Award and an NPPA award.

The exhibition of photos by Massoud Hossaini, who is with Agence France-Presse, includes pictures of the attack on December 6, 2010, and also scenes from everyday life in the country he has covered as a photojournalist ever since 2004.

"I see Afghanistan as an outsider, because I did not grow up here", says Massoud (30) who is an Afghan citizen but was raised in Iran.

"Most Afghan people have war as part of their normal lives, but I never had that in Iran".

Westerners now tend to see Afghanistan solely as a war which began with Osama bin Laden's attacks on 9/11. But Afghanistan is Hossaini Massoud's country and he wants to show traditions and scenes from ordinary, everyday life.

Zone of Absolute Discomfort Advance and Retreat in Russia's Arctic

Russian bureaucrats call the Arctic the "Zone of Absolute Discomfort" - an icy hinterland dotted with dilapidated towns and villages that are awful to live in, but just habitable enough for communities to extract billions of tons of oil, gas and metals trapped under the permafrost.

The Russian Arctic, stretching 7000 kilometers across the top of the planet, from Finland to Alaska, was, for thousands of years, home to indigenous herders only. The Soviet Union destroyed their lives when nomads were forced to settle in towns and work on collectivized farms.

The Arctic was further transformed when Stalin sent prisoners from all parts of the USSR to northern gulags to mine the riches there. While the concentration camps were destroyed after Stalin's death, many people chose to stay, thus establishing the communities there today.

At the height of the Cold War, industrial output surged, and Arctic towns became havens offering jobs and prosperity, and boarding houses were set up to accommodate newcomers.

In the 1990s, after the fall of the Soviet Union, Russia no longer wanted to support these isolated Arctic settlements. Many left, and those who stayed, mostly the old, sick and alcoholic, now live in poverty and misery as factories, schools and hospitals close down.

Recently, new life came to the Arctic region when billions of tons of oil and gas reserves were discovered under the tundra. Moscow is reasserting its might in the Far North, sending in super-machines and specialists and can now exploit its resources to bully gas-hungry European countries.

Since 2009 I have made six journeys to the Russian Arctic from my base in Moscow. I have read reports on resurgent Russia and the way it has turned the North Pole region into a potential battleground with the USA, Canada and Norway, not least, by planting a titanium flag on the Arctic seabed.

On my first trip, it took 40 hours by train to reach the town of Vorkuta, once part of the Gulag. There, and in other previously abandoned towns and villages, I met people who seemed to be from three different centuries: the indigenous people, the Soviet communities, and the modern oil and gas engineers. I was impressed by their will to live in this harsh land; I was also struck by the immense demographic and ecological crises as Putin's government, following in Stalin's footsteps, attempts to control the region.

While my scope is ambitious, the result is intimate. The body of work focuses on the people of the Arctic, their aspirations, their love and their survival, as history unfolds in a landscape of haunting fragility.

I love you real fast Swaziland, 2006-2011

Coming of age for Swazi girls is tough. Swaziland, a tiny African nation of one million, is one of the world's last absolute monarchies. The age-old tradition of polygamy and a relaxed attitude toward sexuality have proven to be a devastating combination for women. Swaziland reports the highest percentage of HIV positive citizens of any country in the world. The hardest hit are women aged 15-29: half of young Swazi women are HIV positive.

Last year the King of Swaziland celebrated his silver jubilee, but in the twenty-five years of his reign, young women, the backbone of the country, have struggled against the odds just to remain alive: over the past ten years, female life expectancy has dropped from age 61 to almost 31.

Since 2006, I have been documenting the coming-of-age rituals of young women living amidst the spread of disease and its victims; women who, even in the face of staggering odds and deep uncertainty, still possess the energy and enthusiasm of youth. I wanted to capture the nuances that comprise a human, rather than simply a tragic experience. Over the past six years, my insights have matured along with these young women. Working on the story has been an opportunity for me to witness fast-tracked intimacy and friends lost and gained. It has made me see that girls here are constantly on the verge – on the verge of giving birth, of burying best friends, of finding love and fighting for life – alone, stigmatized, and heartbroken.

The images cover three themes. The first is the traditional Umhlanga Dance: some 40 000 young women from across the country gather to celebrate their virginity in an eight-day ceremony held in honor of the Queen Mother.

The polygamous King Mswati III often chooses one of the young women as his wife – he now has thirteen. The second theme looks at modern youth culture, and the third is an intimate look inside the homes of HIV-positive women, many suffering disproportionately because of inequality in the home, little say in sexual negotiations, gender-based violence, isolation and abandonment.

Nigeria, a nation lost to the gods

Counting bodies in Nigeria is an endless task, day after day; and there are endless announcements of bomb attacks: on churches and police stations, in Maiduguri, Kano, Damaturu and Gombe. "Bombs are our daily bread." But as the situation in Maiduguri degenerates into a state of open guerilla warfare, there are still a very few profitable businesses in the region, such as Mr. Mari's hotel which houses Nigerian army officers.

It is not easy to convey the idea of the chaos prevailing in the northern part of the Federation of Nigeria. Nothing is easy in Nigeria. Religious tension flared up just as the military regime came to an end, in 1999. Once the country was freed from dictatorial rule, it split in two once again. Nigeria is an extraordinarily diverse society with more than 200 ethnic groups, and was amalgamated as one country under British colonial rule when Lord Lugard was Governor in 1914. One century later, the amalgamation appears both obsolete and insoluble.

This report began with the presidential election which triggered political tension, made immediately worse by religious conflict. When the Muslim opposition candidate Muhammadu Buhari was defeated by Goodluck Jonathan, the North lost any real political influence and is now effectively sidelined for the next three years. This proved too much for the people to bear; their sense of frustration at being used and exploited by corrupt politicians could no longer be contained, and within a few days 800 people had died. In the mainly Christian South, which has the oil reserves, the economy was thriving - it is one of the most dynamic economies in Africa. In the North, 75% of the population live on less than 150 euros a year. In the North, the economy is declining and illiteracy has reached record levels.

This is the melting pot which has provided the recruits for the insurrection raging in the northern half of the country for the past two years. Attacks carried out by Boko Haram (the Hausa name for Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'awati Wal-Jihad), which has killed more than a thousand people since 2009, have brought terror to the people. Boko Haram is a radical Islamist jihadist group, originally from Borno State; it advocates strict application of Sharia law, abolition of the secular system, and total rejection of Western values, and has been conducting a relentless campaign against Christians, the army and police. In January 2012, a state of emergency was declared in a number of Local Government Areas, and power was handed over to the armed forces, forces renowned for their brutality and lack of discipline; there have been eye-witness reports of summary executions. Local communities are trapped between the factions and while huge sums have been allocated for security (a record 20% of the federal budget), the Boko Haram sect has managed to remain beyond the reach of the authorities.

In central Nigeria, Christians and Muslims meet; this is the Middle Belt, including Jos, and is the epicenter of long-standing religious and ethnic violence. Local politicians, such as Plateau State Governor Jonah Jang, have spread religion and also mistrust, verging on hatred. The locals say that they are on one of the front lines in a war of religion which broke out on 9/11. Global issues combine and compound local issues and each successive crisis only increases divisions between communities, and that applies to all communities: Berom, Hausa, Fulani, Ngas, native and non-native. A local motto - Land of Peace and Tourism - is now a distant mirage, a long-faded memory.

How do these communities whose beliefs are diametrically opposed live together as part of a single nation where, day after day, anger and frustration grow greater? What is left as the social contract collapses, undermined by those in power who prevail through extreme corruption and injustice?

This report, covering more than one year, endeavored to explore the sectarian violence and observe, if not the reasons at least the symptoms, as seen in the harsh, murky light of the North. It is impossible to uncover the underground sources feeding the violence; they are organic, secret groups, with as many of them as there are identities in Nigeria.

Sámi, the people that walk with reindeer (2007-2011)

I came on a search to understand the primal drive of the modern hunter by taking an inclusive look at an original hunter-gatherer nomadic society. I came to find people who could interpret the language of the land when it speaks. I came in search of silence so that I could begin to hear again.

Every day in the Arctic, extremes play upon the lives of the Sámi, an indigenous group whose name means "the people."

The Sámi, who live in the Arctic region of northern Scandinavia and Russia, the largest area in the world with a way of life following the seasonal migration of animals, are by tradition reindeer herders, living as nomads, but today only 10% still work in reindeer husbandry, a business now regulated by the European Union. With their livelihood dependent on their surroundings, the herders are acutely aware of changes to nature and specifically to the Arctic landscape.

My photographs explore the symbiotic relationship which Sámi herders have with their environment, and their existence in today's world with links to their ancestral roots.

The work was done in Kautokeino, Norway and Gallivare, Sweden, where I worked as a beaga, or housekeeper, for a family of Sámi reindeer herders. I chose to immerse myself this way to gain a better understanding of what I was seeing and experiencing when creating the images. The actual image-making process was intuitive, but the process for understanding the culture required full immersion, working with the people, and listening to and learning the North Sámi language.

The spoken Sámi language, with Finno-Ugric roots, has evolved over time and is considered an Arctic language with a rich ability to explain the natural world.

The reindeer-herding Sámi remain largely removed from urban life, but straddle two worlds, tied to their historical roots while also acknowledging modern realities. They maintain a deep connection with nature and are still semi-nomadic, with little need for the world beyond the Arctic. Yet Sámi herders also embrace global connectedness, modern technology and popular culture.

Living with the Sámi, I observed nature in its beauty and brutality. Through their lives, I hope to have a better understanding of our role as stewards of the earth, recognizing the cycles of life and death and the role people have to play.

The Sámi have managed to survive in extreme climatic circumstances, and as biodiversity, forest stability, water and wildlife management become increasingly important global concerns, this community will be vital to understanding sustainability in the Arctic region.

Urban Quilombo

The project stands as a testimony to a place that no longer exists.

In 2003, dozens of families occupied the Galpao da Araujo Barreto, an abandoned chocolate factory in Salvador de Bahia, Brazil. Before moving there, the families had lived in the dangerous streets of the city but, tired of living with so much violence and despair, they came together and took over the deserted factory which was in ruins, making it their own home. Since 2009, I have been documenting the community of Barreto. From my studies in sociology, I understood that it was a unique community, a vast subculture within the greater city which became one extended family. They created a microcosm where problems of drugs, prostitution and violence could be tackled with the support of the community.

Over the past decade, Brazil has become a paradigm of economic growth in Latin America, and for developing countries across the world. Yet at the same time, Brazil has become one of the most unequal societies in the world.

Barreto was a place where ideas, goods and services were exchanged, creating a bond and identity that helped the members of the community survive in a society that had marginalized them. Community life was a form of struggle and resistance – resistance to the society that saw them merely as a dysfunctional organ, excluding them from any normal role which citizens in a healthy society are entitled to have.

Three years ago I came to Barreto to see how communities formed as a survival mechanism in a fragmented society. Over the years, I have witnessed almost everything in the range of human experience: love, despair, betrayal, lust, passion, solidarity, friendship, empathy, conflict, forgiveness and a sense of family.

But the most important thing was the strength of the community members, able to avoid disappearing into oblivion, fighting on despite being social outcasts, building a community with the ultimate goal of worthy survival, building a home, raising a family, and continuing the fight against the powers that oppress them.

The strength and courage of the community of Barreto came from the creativity of the members seeking new ways to subsist in abandoned industrial environments in the city. These actions which go against the established norms of society are much more than passing acts of rebellion. They are planting the seeds of new cultures of resistance, creating new relationships between human beings in society, and with their environment, so that they can survive. They have established new and different value systems, interpersonal relationships, and new codes and rules within society itself.

I made several trips between my first visit in 2009 and March 2011 when the government demolished the factory and evicted all the families. This was one of many attempts to clean up visible poverty in the center of Brazil's cities, mainly because of international events to be held in the country over the next few years, e.g. the 2014 FIFA World Cup and the 2016 Olympic Games. Brazil has come close to committing human rights violations with the continued, reckless efforts to remove favelas.

When the Barreto community was forcibly relocated, there were around 130 families living there, in an area approximately the size of a football field. While the physical site of Barreto no longer exists, the community lives on: the families now live together in the Jardim das Margaridas, a marginalized neighborhood on the outskirts of the city.

The government moved them there, together with another 500 families from favelas around the city. The process of urban gentrification has become a common practice around the world as the transformation of city centers moves low-income communities out of neighborhoods with economic potential and appeal; these then become expensive, fashionable residential areas. My main objective with this photo-essay was to document the emotional and physical ties between the families that comprise the Barreto community. The community stands as a metaphor, the symbolic point where the tragic disintegration of human life has combined perfectly with the magic realism of Latin America.

These American States

"America will never be destroyed from the outside. If we falter and lose our freedoms, it will be because we destroyed ourselves."
~ Abraham Lincoln

Seeking God, spreading hatred and racism, and the decaying American landscape.

These American States, as they are sometimes called, are individual, and at times violently divided, as are the citizens who live within them. People seek solace in forms of religion that vary from the traditional to the arcane: outdoor baptisms to cleanse the soul, snake worshipping to fend off evil.

Fanaticism and racism are being spread by the resurgence of the Ku Klux Klan and the Aryan Nation, with new generations growing up with Hatred as a father. Freedom of expression and tolerance cross lines of morality.

Anti-abortionists use shock treatment to rally their cause.

Governments can abandon once beautiful landscapes, now deserted and laid barren by toxic waste, while women in chain-gangs bury the homeless in the desert.

Whose America is it?

Jim Lo Scalzo has crossed the United States to document the extremes of American culture and the callous poisoning of nature's beauty.

Syria, inside Homs

Shortly before the Syrian uprising, the first people to sense that revolution was on the way were the most determined opponents of Bashar el-Assad's régime. They could still remember 1982 and the Hama massacre, the cruel epilogue to crush an Islamist revolt that had been going on for three years. At the time, the régime was led by Hafez el-Assad, the father of the current president, who had no qualms about firing heavy weapons on the fourth largest city in the country, leaving thousands dead, although no official figures were ever released. (According to estimates, the number of dead was between 10 000 and 20 000.)

The opponents were right. Since March 17, 2011, and the first killings in Deraa in the south of the country, the Syrian regime has again opted for a military response, plus a few purely cosmetic reforms on the side. When massive crowds gained control of the streets, peacefully, the régime was faced with a challenge, and attempted to push part of the opposition movement into armed confrontation, an area where it believed it held the advantage.

Under this pressure, the Free Syrian Army formed, their ranks filled with deserters and civilians, and the angry demonstrations still continued every Friday. Bashar el-Assad's calculation turned out to be short-sighted, as a classical guerilla force took shape, prepared to concede terrain when concentrated forces sent in by the regime from time to time proved to be too powerful, and then quick to return once the armored vehicles had set off for another rebel stronghold.

Another weak point of the regime was that it failed to rebuild the "wall of fear" which had been established over three decades or more of repression – from the Tadmor prison massacre in 1980 to the Sednaya prison massacre in 2008 – and despite the fact that since the beginning of the uprising the régime had set its militia forces, the Shabiha, to do the dirty work: summary executions, torture, ethnic cleansing, attacks on communities, rape and more.

Over the last fifteen months the country has been in the grips of unbelievable violence – the violence of a State with total disregard for even the most basic humanitarian principles. Hospitals, medical centers and doctors have been targeted, as opponents are methodically hunted down across the country. Eye-witness reports from Homs from special correspondents for the newspaper Le Monde and the NGO Médecins sans frontières describe organized hunts through public buildings, and the wounded have no other choice than to rely on makeshift medical centers with little or no medical supplies.

To help maintain its chance of survival, the Syrian regime has chosen the inhumane option, with no going back, spreading hate and triggering reprisals, settling old scores: the choice of the scorched earth policy.

Fearless genius: the digital revolution in Silicon Valley 1985-2000

For fifteen years, I documented the efforts of a secretive tribe of engineers, entrepreneurs, and venture capitalists in Silicon Valley as they created technology that would change our culture and behavior, and challenge what it means to be human.

My project began in 1985 when Steve Jobs was forced out of Apple and began his quest for redemption by attempting to build a super-computer for education. Steve represented the freewheeling sensibility of the times, combining his idealistic, hippie vision and design aesthetic with the space-race ambitions of the prior generation. I wanted to understand his process of innovation and believed that by photographing Steve I could also gain insights into the larger subject of Silicon Valley itself. I requested special access to shadow Steve and his team, and he immediately agreed. After three years, I expanded my project, gaining the trust and private access to every major innovator and over seventy companies, often for years at a time. I continued shooting through the rise of the internet and dot-com boom of the 1990s, generating 250 000 negatives over the life of the project. Stanford University Library is now working to research and preserve this material for study.

During this era, the accelerating pace of innovation was affecting the very nature of work, the structure of corporations and the global business environment as countries began manufacturing new technology. A digital revolution was under way that would create more jobs and more wealth than at any time in human history.

Throughout the project I photographed with several concerns in mind. Primarily, I needed to understand how Silicon Valley innovators fit into the context of my work which explores the human experience of individuals as they attempt to achieve the impossible, overcoming fear and limitations. I am curious about what motivates some people to rise against insurmountable obstacles and find meaning in their lives, while others simply cannot engage. Steve Jobs was again attempting to change the world with his team - to achieve the impossible - by fitting the power of a mainframe into a one-foot cube. Steve told me he hoped a kid at Stanford could use it to cure cancer in his dorm room. Because he believed this was possible, his team also believed, and his pursuit became a noble mission. I began to see that technologists were like any other human beings working to overcome adversity. Except if they succeeded, all humanity might benefit.

I want to foster dialogue around what lessons can be learned from the era which I documented. Since 2000, there has not been a single technology innovation in the United States that has scaled up to create millions of jobs as personal computers did. Facebook, Twitter, Google and others combined have added only 50 000 jobs and are basically software iterations built on work done in the digital revolution.

Creating jobs is a global issue. But in the US the economy is hollowed out, and our educational system seems broken. We have graduated fewer Doctorates in Computer Science this year than in 1970. We have also cut visas for foreign workers and students, further limiting our ability to innovate. Kids today cannot imagine a world without texting, email or life online. They embrace all the newest digital technology but do not understand where it came from. How can we inspire the next generation of engineers and inventors? Who will be the next Steve Jobs? Is she in China or India? Brazil?

Beneath the vast enterprise and all the PR hype, I saw through my project, I discovered the joyful, primal urge to invent tools that has driven human progress for millennia. I saw something uncontrollable, hungry and wild - something human - that yet remains in Silicon Valley, with hope for a new technology revolution that can fulfill the promises of the last one.

Afrikaner Blood The Born Free Generation

"Aside from the Aborigines in Australia, the African black is the most underdeveloped, barbaric species of the human race on Earth."

Colonel Franz Jooste
leader of the Kommandokorps, South Africa.

An extreme right-wing group is teaching young white South Africans to eschew Nelson Mandela's vision of a multicultural rainbow nation. The Kommandokorps, a fringe group led by ex-apartheid leader Franz Jooste, holds holiday camps for Afrikaner teenagers, mainly of Dutch and German descent. Jooste teaches them self-defense. He says that black South Africans are their enemy, that they are first and foremost Afrikaners and should deny their South African identity.

The Kommandokorps feeds on anxiety. Though the national crime rate is dropping, South Africans are increasingly anxious. Every day, fifty murders are committed and there are more than two hundred thousand assaults with intent to cause bodily harm. The excessive violence is the primary factor driving the sense of fear.

As a result, farmers organize themselves into countryside militia and patrol at night to ensure their cattle are not stolen; urban residents form neighborhood watches, and every South African (white and black) who can afford it hires a private security firm which will send an armed response team to the home whenever the alarm goes off. All of this provides fertile ground for an organization such as the Kommandokorps.

After nine days of military style training, the boys return home. They go back to their mixed schools, where their black peers are in the same classroom. Day-to-day life remains, but fear and hate have infiltrated their system. Their parents too seem to be struggling with the "new" South Africa.

Apartheid ended 18 years ago, and the children born since, referred to as the "Born Free Generation," are now becoming adults in modern-day South Africa, growing up as part of the rainbow nation. In just nine days, boys who could once believe in South Africa's unity, are turned into tough men with racist ideas.

Ilvy Njikiktjen

While the camp trains only a fraction of Afrikaner youth, experts believe there is a real threat. Once children are convinced that blacks are the enemy, the danger is that they will act accordingly, harming their black peers.

2004-2012

It was Spring 2004. Mark Grosset, director of lcart-Photo school, drew our attention to the work of one of his students. His end of year project: Haiti. Truly remarkable!

It was a "first" report, but with such maturity. That outstanding report was screened at Campo Santo on the last evening of the festival, offering clear evidence that photojournalism was well and truly alive. Then came the Congo, Haiti again, and Tunisia, Egypt, Libya – Rémi Ochlik was following the Arab Spring.

On February 22 his career came to a sudden end. He was hit by Bashar el-Assad's shellfire, in Homs, Syria, with Marie Colvin of the Sunday Times.

On February 22 photojournalism lost one of its most promising figures, and we are now paying him a well deserved tribute with this exhibition.

"WORSE THAN DRUGS" OR THE RECOLLECTIONS OF A YOUNG REPORTER

The four-wheel-drive vehicle is heading inescapably towards the roadblock. We are praying that the gargoyles there can read, that they can see "International Press" written on the vehicle....

Our mouths are already dry, so we light a cigarette that tastes of nothing; it just burns your throat. The car doors open and you're dragged from the car, an automatic weapon held to the side of your head. You think about your family, your funeral and a pile of things out of context. The worst thing is their eyes: red, glassy and lifeless. They are completely out of it on crack, capable of doing anything and everything, especially the worst. They bellow orders in Creole which we can't understand. The body search is rough, the gun still held to the head. They're looking for weapons. One of them signals to us to get back into the car, but the others don't agree. They scream and start fighting one another with sticks. We are terrified. We are twenty years old and don't really want to die. We'd give anything to be somewhere else, a long, long way away; never to have come here. Eye-witness report? Big deal! Who for? Why?

No one gives a damn about this rotten island. They can all kill one another and the world couldn't care less. But we are here and we are in deep shit. Just the slightest thing and a shot will go off and we'll bite the dust. Then there is a blast, and our eardrums seem to explode. We can't hear anything. There is a distance between the brain, thought and the outside world, as if we are in a bubble. We can see their mouths moving, but no sound comes out. The idiot who's just fired the shot seems pleased with himself. Now they've finally managed to agree and we can leave...

We are deathly pale, stunned, but we've got through. The adrenalin is going down, and nerves are unwinding. We burst out laughing, a strange fit of laughter, out of place, and uncontrollable. The heartbeat is getting back to normal when, in the distance, we spot another roadblock... This particular evening, on the trip back from the north of the country, on the road from Saint-Marc to Port-au-Prince, we go through six roadblocks like that. More than three hours for five lousy kilometers.... You think about the strangeness, the two sides that create war. We've just gone through some terrifying moments when we would have sold our grandmothers to be a long way away from that shit, and yet, almost immediately after getting out of that fix, there's only one thing we want to do. We are set on one single idea: go back there, again and again, feel that powerful adrenalin rush. War is worse than drugs. At the time it's a bad trip, a nightmare, but the moment it's over, once the danger has passed, you're just dying to get back there, to take photos and risk your life, for nothing much, really. It's a force beyond understanding which always pushes you on, urging you to keep on going back."

The Rastafari Movement

The Rastafari movement, founded by descendants of black slaves fighting for emancipation, challenged the established religious and political order introduced by white colonial powers. The young religion reinterpreted the bible and offered perspectives of freedom to people traumatized by four centuries of slavery. It is a messianic movement and clearly one of the grand freedom fighting movements in the history of mankind, but the media, fascinated by the iconic Bob Marley, have often considered Rastafarians to be little more than marijuana and dreadlocks.

For nearly a century now, the spiritual children of Haile Selassie, Emperor of Ethiopia, have taken their beliefs across the world. I followed them to Jamaica, Ethiopia, the United States and Europe, so as to present an honest view of the brotherhood as they turn their backs on pagan "Babylon" to reach the promised land of Zion.

Freedom Fighters

Their goal is democracy and a fairer society, free of corruption. In Arab countries the younger generation feels a bond with the values of "free" democratic countries, and they have spoken out, calling for a republic where their aspirations and capabilities can be fulfilled.

Today, unfortunately, the Arab Spring movement appears to have come to an end. The future in the region is clouded in uncertainty as these popular uprisings do not have the leadership and structural organization needed after the initial insurrection, and have thus left the political scene open to better organized, better financed Islamist groups.

Whatever the political outcome of these rebellions, the renaissance of the Arab world, so long in gestation and so often aborted, now seems to be happening. It is now impossible to ignore popular uprisings; this, at least, is one of the lessons learnt from the Arab revolutions. With the Internet and new technologies being so powerful and omnipresent, it is impossible to imagine that pictures and voices today will not reach the eyes and ears of the world. Under authoritarian regimes, in a police state, words (and now amateur videos and photos) are a source of both danger and freedom: they can lead to prison and torture, or they may bring deliverance from frustration and fear.

The people of Arab countries have proven this, and powerfully so, as ordinary citizens, transcending fear, have taken part in the revolutions and have become heroes who will go down in the annals of history. I wanted to pay tribute to the courage and daring of these freedom fighters calling for democratic reform, the activists - for one day or for eternity - anonymous and well known, the revolutionary icons of these portraits vividly expressing not just anger, but also hope.

North Korea Hunger Crisis

In October 2011, Bangkok-based Damir Sagolj traveled with Alertnet, a Thomson Reuters Foundation's humanitarian news service, and Médecins Sans Frontières to North Korea, at the request of the regime's Economy and Trade Information Center. After six months on standby, the group was granted a tightly controlled week-long trip into the South Hwanghae region, the country's rice-bowl, to report on a growing food crisis. They gained access to collective farms, orphanages, hospitals, rural clinics, schools and nurseries rarely or never seen by the media.

In a pediatric hospital in North Korea's most productive farming province, children lay two to a bed. All showed signs of severe malnutrition: skin infections, patchy hair, and listlessness. «Their mothers have to bring them here on bicycles», said duty doctor Jang Kum Son in the Yellow Sea port city of Haeju. «We used to have an ambulance but it has broken down completely. One mother traveled 72 kilometers. By the time they get here, it is often too late».

According to World Food Program (WFP) estimates (March 2011), 6 million North Koreans need food aid and one-third of children are chronically malnourished and/or have stunted growth. In contrast, the United Nations recognizes a food crisis in Somalia affecting 4 million people.

North Korea has relied on food aid since the mid-1990s. Critics say Pyongyang spends most of what little hard currency it earns maintaining a million-strong army and developing nuclear weapons and missiles instead of feeding the millions suffering from malnutrition.

A savage winter that froze seeds in the ground hit early crops even before the summer's floods. The province of South Hwanghae normally produces one-third of the country's total grain supply, pumping wheat, maize and rice into the Public Distribution System which supplies food to two-thirds of the population.

Appeals by the regime for massive food aid (the apparent motive for granting access) had gone mostly unanswered by a skeptical international community. Only 30% of a UN food aid target set for North Korea had been met. The USA and South Korea, the two biggest donors before sanctions, had said they would not resume aid until they were satisfied that the military-led communist regime would not divert the aid for its own uses and until progress had been made on disarmament talks. The image which the regime presented in South Hwanghae was largely one of chronic hunger; dire healthcare, limited access to clean water and a collapsing food-rationing system, all under a controlled economy that has been in crisis for more than twenty years, ever since North Korea was left in isolation after the collapse of the Soviet Union.

In one orphanage in Haeju, 28 children huddled together on the floor of a small clinic, singing «We have nothing to envy», an anthem to North Korea's longstanding policy of juche (self-reliance) that has made this one of the most closed societies on earth.

Measurements taken of each child's mid-upper arm with color-coded plastic bracelets, a standard test for malnutrition, showed that twelve were in the orange/red danger zones, meaning that some could die without proper treatment. MSF nutrition experts found similar results among children at other institutions, but stressed that the findings were not statistically significant.

At an orphanage in Hwangju town in North Hwanghae province, eleven of the twelve children in the clinic were critically malnourished and appeared to be no more than three or four years old; orphanage staff insisted that they were eight, but severely stunted because of malnutrition. «I've never seen stunting like this before, not ever, not even in Ethiopia». [Delphine Chedorge, deputy program manager of emergencies, MSF France].

Child Brides

My first encounter with child marriage occurred in 2003 while working on a story about self-immolation in Afghanistan. I was stunned at what I discovered, no fewer than ten girls and young women in Herat had set themselves on fire. Each survivor gave a different reason. One 15-year-old had broken her husband's television set; another had had an argument with her parents-in-law because the tea she had made was not hot enough. None of the reasons matched the intensity of their response. Worse, not all survived. I continued photographing the issue over a number of visits to Afghanistan. I listened carefully to the women's stories and noticed a common denominator: they had all been married at a very young age, some as young as nine, and to much older men.

Photographing these young girls in agony and, in some cases death, made my heart ache. I wondered how bad their lives must have been for them to prefer death, and in such a violent way. I also felt a responsibility as a journalist to look for the answers, especially if I was going to present these troubling images to the world.

Within the year, I visited a shelter in Herat where several girls shared their traumatic experiences with me. There I met a young woman named Mejgon whose drug addict father had sold her into marriage when she was eleven. She detailed the rape by her husband, describing how she had been used and abused until she escaped, ultimately ending up in the shelter. She then said something I will never forget, as she looked at me with tears in her eyes, speaking quietly: "In my whole life, I have never felt love".

It was at that moment that I fully devoted myself to this issue. While I have covered many profound events as a photojournalist, I had never encountered anyone who felt so alone. I hugged Mejgon and made a silent vow to her and to the many millions of girls in similar situations.

In subsequent years I traveled to Ethiopia, India, Nepal and Yemen. I learned that this harmful traditional practice spans continents, languages, religions and castes. Almost every time, I wanted to take the girl, throw her over my shoulder and get her out of there. But I learned that it was much more complicated than that. We are not family members; we do not know what repercussions she would face. And how do we choose which of the 60 million girls currently trapped in these marriages to rescue? Where would we take them all? How would we pay for their living expenses and educate them?

These unanswered questions only further committed me to the project. My goal was then for these images to have as much influence as possible on people's understanding of the issue, its urgency and the need to work together with these communities. Every image in this project was created with the help of local people living in these societies. They were also done with the permission of the girls' guardians, parents or husbands. One mother in Afghanistan, upset that her eleven-year-old daughter was engaged, exclaimed: "We are selling our daughters because we do not have enough to feed the rest of our children!"

These are the people who need our support, both financially and politically, so that they can be empowered to combat child marriage in their communities. It is in their best interest, for child marriage not only harms the young brides, but is also an obstacle to the overall development of these societies.

We must act now, for 100 million more girls (25 000 a day) will be forced to marry before they turn 18 if urgent action is not taken.

ONE BLOOD, Beirut 2012 Unity in Diversity

SING THE SONG OF LIFE, OFFERING A GIFT

In times long past, in the fury of movements so extreme that they could crush the heart of the earth and bodies held prisoner there, in the deafening noise of bombs and the wily whistling of shrapnel rushing to pierce flesh, in the thuds and echoes of bodies lying tangled by the roadside, as well as the suffering and joy of new life, in the wonders accomplished to revive a body and defy death, hiding there is a precious element, a universal, timeless principle of life – blood.

The principle may be invisible, but is revealed in birth, or death. It expresses the unique mark of the individual and the unique mark of the greater community of mankind. It is a link both universal and essential for each and every being; yet so much blood has been shed for futile and unjust reasons, because of human folly, because of the brutality of nature. Hady Sy contemplated this treasure enjoyed by every member of the human race, and wished to make it visible, for to disregard blood would be a blow for us all, whereas a tribute to blood could only enhance our dignity.

As an established photographer and artist, Hady Sy is familiar with the mysterious alchemy capable of rendering visible things invisible, able to bring forth a latent image so patiently composed and so promptly revealed, and is only too aware that things prodigious may be concealed, lying in wait. Hady Sy devised the idea of taking pictures of blood donated, and to combine these with photographic portraits of the donors.

His idea was to uncover the mystery of blood, to let blood speak for itself, defending its own arguments and thereby convincing skeptics. Conscious of his own mixed blood, with his own experience of the pain of being different during civil strife in Beirut – the city that has suffered so, and which epitomizes all conflict in the world – he has shown that our blood, our different bloods, our bodies, are one; and with great affection and sorrow, he has been there with his sister as the blood disorder affecting her gradually progresses. The intention was not to reveal times of despair, but to show times of hope, not times when life is taken away, but times when life is given so generously.

He submitted his plan for the project now named ONE BLOOD, Beirut 2012 to international organizations involved in blood donation, and embarked on an extensive journey taking him to many destinations, including Greenland, the Amazon, Nepal and Africa, traveling with his own photography studio to take pictures, in daylight, of all the donors who have voluntarily and spontaneously given their blood, donating an essential part of their being.

The remarkable collection of work from across the world forms a subtle and invaluable report showing individuals in their everyday context: a farmer in Nepal, a monk in Bhutan, a banker in Lebanon, a man searching for gold in the Amazon, a cleaning lady in the Emirates and also intellectuals, a shady character in Brazil and a musician in Australia. This obviously covers a range of costumes and customs, of original poses contrasting with conventional models, showing situations that are quite simple, or on the contrary quite elaborate, featuring expressions that convey the full gamut of human emotions, while the scene in the background is determined by the vicissitudes of weather and natural light. All the donors consented to be part of the exercise, showing their blood, whether a bag or just a drop, posing for the photographer and answering an ID questionnaire.

The exhibit is presented as a semi-circular installation: the portraits (most of them black & white) on one side, and the (color) photos of the blood on the other; the two elements personifying each model thus set back to back.

Homelands: Indigenous Australia

Lily Karadada was born 89 years ago in the bush, where she grew up naked, living off the land, in the same way her ancestors had for the previous 40 000 years. I met her five years ago while on an unrelated assignment in Australia for National Geographic magazine, and it was Lily who sparked my interest to return and tell this story. As an Aborigine, Lily's place in society has been distinctly different from her non-indigenous counterparts. Her generation has lived through massacres, seen ancestral land stolen, been subjected to relocations and government policies that controlled their movements, who they married, where they worked and even took their children. It was not until Lily was 41 years old, in 1962, that her people were given the right to vote. Today Lily lives in a rectangular, cinderblock house with a cement floor, built by the government, in the community of Kalumburu where unemployment is over 85%.

Over recent years, I have made multiple trips to Aboriginal Australia. I have photographed government communities, lived with individuals on their ancestral homelands and explored population centers such as Alice Springs, the "Indigenous capital" of Australia. Throughout the journey, I have witnessed sharp contrasts of struggle and strength: from inadequate housing conditions and addiction in towns and government communities to Aboriginal homelands where families manage and care for their own land, both physically and spiritually. Rivers of programs, both private and public, run through the country, endeavoring to "close the gap" between indigenous and non-indigenous Australia, but deep divisions remain.

Aboriginals have the worst health statistics and living conditions of any indigenous group in the world, even though they live in one of the world's richest countries. Rosie Pearson, a young Aboriginal woman and professional modern dancer in Sydney, summed it up: "I just don't understand why our culture isn't treated as a freakin' national treasure". Amnesty International recently noted that most non-indigenous Australians have never even met an Aboriginal person. These images represent my small attempt to capture modern Aboriginal culture, and it is my fondest hope that they might help foster a connection between the too-long divided worlds of indigenous and non-indigenous Australia.

The Marsh Arabs of Iraq

In Southern Iraq, the muddy waters of the Tigris River merge with the blue waters of the Euphrates to form a mighty flood plain of reeds and water – the marshlands of ancient Mesopotamia. Often considered the site of the legendary Garden of Eden, the Marshes and their surrounding desert cities have been inhabited since ancient Sumerian times. Sumerian seals and tablets in the British Museum show a way of life that flourished until the late 1970s and still partially exists today.

Within this waterworld of lakes and giant reedbeds dwelt a community of Marsh Arabs – the Mada'an. Unlike their desert counterparts who lived in tents and rode camels, these tribal Marshmen built villages of houses, some as large as small churches, made from woven reeds standing on small islands. They paddled canoes with high prows, fished for carp with pronged spears, raised water buffalo grazing among the reedbeds, and cultivated rice on the muddy banks. The women gathered reeds to weave mats for roofing and floor coverings, and to sell at nearby markets. In the 1950s, more than 100 000 people lived in the wetlands, an expanse of 20 000 square kilometers.

Throughout Iraqi history, this remote area has been a refuge for criminals, draft-dodgers and political opponents of the Baghdad government. In the late 1970s, I spent several weeks inside this closed community, firstly on assignment for National Geographic, and later working on a book devoted to the Marsh Arab way of life. The normally paranoid Iraqi government, often wary of showing the "primitive" aspect of the country, granted me exceptional authorization for access plus logistical support, even providing a military helicopter for aerial photos. The Iraqi government was interested in my report as a record for posterity showing the details of this historic civilization before they began systematically destroying it. Saddam Hussein was determined to bring the marshes under government control.

Committing one of the great ecological crimes of the 20th century, he built a network of sluices, embankments and canals to divert the flow of the rivers and drain the marshes of their lifeblood.

Disaster first struck the Marsh Arabs after the Iran-Iraq war, largely fought around the wetlands along the Iranian border; when Saddam used gas on several village, which, in his opinion, had not fought bravely enough. Then, after the First Gulf War when the Shiites of the South revolted against Saddam's regime anticipating US assistance which never came, the Iraqi president sent troops to bomb villages and terrorize the population. The inhabitants fled, and by the year 2000, 90% of the wetlands had been destroyed and the people displaced. After the US invasion, the dykes and sluices were reopened and parts of the marshes were reflooded. International aid agencies have helped a small percentage of Marshmen resettle in their villages and resume their traditional way of life. Progress has been slow with several years of drought, but many birds and fish, and a few Ma'daan have returned to the wetlands.

Couvent des Minimes

World Press Photo is committed to supporting and advancing high standards in photojournalism and documentary photography worldwide. The foundation strives to generate wide public interest in, and appreciation for, the work of photographers, and to encourage the free exchange of information.

Each year, World Press Photo invites photographers throughout the world to participate in the World Press Photo Contest, the premier international competition in photojournalism. All entries are judged in Amsterdam by an independent international jury composed of 19 experts. The prizewinning images are displayed in an annual exhibition that tours to 100 locations in 45 countries, and is seen by millions of visitors.

Activities further include an annual contest for multimedia, exhibitions on a variety of current themes, and the stimulation of photojournalism through educational programs.

World Press Photo is run as an independent, non-profit organization with its office in Amsterdam, the Netherlands, where World Press Photo was founded in 1955.

For more information about World Press Photo and the prizewinning images, for interviews with the photographers, and for an updated exhibition schedule, please visit: www.worldpressphoto.org. This year, World Press Photo adds an extra dimension to its worldwide exhibitions with the launch of a new application, the Exhibition app. Through this app, visitors can access a wealth of extended information, including multilingual captions, video interviews with the photographers and technical background information about the images. The application is available for Android and iPhone. Go to www.worldpressphoto.org/app to download the application and scan the relevant QR codes during the exhibition.

Canon celebrates the best in photographic creativity at the 24th Visa pour l'Image Festival in Perpignan

Courbevoie, August 1st 2012 - Canon, a world leader in imaging solutions, today demonstrates its continued commitment to photographic creativity with the announcement of its activity programme at Visa pour l'Image 2012, the festival of photojournalism held annually in Perpignan, France.

Photographic creativity is central to Canon's philosophy, and the company will again demonstrate its leading range of services to photographers at this year's festival, in addition to celebrating the 25th year of the award-winning EOS System. Favoured by professionals across the globe, EOS is long-established as the world's most comprehensive photographic system, offering photographers outstanding quality, performance and creative flexibility. Canon has consistently celebrated the work of photojournalists at Visa pour l'Image throughout the festival's 23 year history, using its capacity as principle sponsor to:

- Support the best in photojournalism and pay tribute to the talent and courage of their work which so effectively communicates the power of image
- Gather the largest possible audience to appreciate the work of photojournalists the world over, stimulating passion for image
- Reinforce communications with professional photographers from around the world, in order to offer them even more outstanding and innovative products

Canon in the Palais des Congrès: From input to output

As well as supporting the festival in its role as a lead sponsor, Canon will also be exhibiting in the Palais des Congrès. Visitors will be able to see the latest range of Canon products and solutions, from image capture through to printing, including:

- An expanded Canon Professional Services (CPS) area, where accredited photographers can be loaned the latest EOS bodies, lenses and accessories, or have their equipment checked and cleaned free of charge
- A photo space displaying the very latest range of ground-breaking professional EOS DSLRs, lenses, accessories, and the PowerShot G-series of digital compact cameras
- A 'print-on-demand' area, where visitors can discover and try the latest models from Canon's PIXMA range and print their photos
- A professional photo studio where Canon's complete input-through-output solution will be shown in action, with captured images using EOS system products being printed on PIXMA Pro and large-format ImagePROGRAF printers
- A stunning photo exhibition displaying the works of Canon Ambassadors, including Brent Stirton, Paolo Pellegrin, Gary Knight, Ziv Koren, and Nick Nichols
- A professional video area, featuring the latest Canon professional video products, including the new Cinema EOS System and models from Canon's handheld X-series of professional video cameras

Seminar Programme

Canon will again curate a line-up of leading photographic and industry professionals, who will deliver presentations and seminars on a variety of topics, including their own stories and images. Projects from the Canon Female Photojournalist Award winners in 2011 and 2012 will be presented as part of the seminar programme, giving visitors a chance to understand the journey and inspiration behind the winning images. The latest photography equipment, techniques and technology will also be covered. This presentation programme will take place in the Palais des Congrès, with the full line-up to be announced on the Canon Professional Network website (<http://cpn.canon-europe.com>) and the Visa pour l'Image site (<http://www.visapourlimage.com>) in the coming weeks.

Canon Female Photojournalist Award

At Visa pour l'Image 2012, Canon and the French Association of Female Journalists (AFJ), in partnership with Le Figaro Magazine, will be presenting Sarah Caron with the Canon Female Photojournalist Award for 2012. She will receive a grant of €8,000 during an award ceremony to be held on Saturday, September 8th. The grant will go towards her proposed project about the Pashtun women in Pakistan, who are victims of segregation due to the rising religious extremism. All entrants have been judged on both previous works and their plans for a future project. As with previous years, the recipient of the 2011 award, Ilvy Njiokiktjien, will also be showcasing her report on Afrikaner teenagers in post-Apartheid South Africa at this year's event.

Visa pour l'Image on the Canon Professional Network website

For more information about Visa pour l'Image, photographers and enthusiasts can visit www.canon-europe.com/cpn, to view interviews, reports and discover the latest news, delivered directly from the festival site.

VISA POUR L'IMAGE
PERPIGNAN 2012

A new edition of Visa pour l'Image, a new commitment to photojournalism for Paris Match.

A photojournalistic reference for the past 63 years, Paris Match has been telling the story of time through its camera lenses and human testimonies, writing the pages of the most astonishing human adventures. Stories making history.

Paris Match named "Magazine of the Year 2012", France 3 asked two filmmakers to "enter the universe of the most popular magazine", resulting in four prime-time summer episodes.

With their camera, Stéphane Bergouhnioux and Pascal Forneri transformed their eyes into curious readers, and commented that "the force of Paris Match's photographic impact is incredible".

For the magazine's editor-in-chief, Olivier Royant, "This force is our passion, the flame transmitted to us by the pioneers of photojournalism."

A passion that Paris Match shares with the professionals and general public at Visa pour l'Image 2012.

Getty Images confirms strong presence at Visa Pour L'Image 2012

Proudly supporting the world's leading photojournalism festival for the fifth consecutive year

London – 3 July, 2012: Getty Images has confirmed support and a significant presence at Visa Pour L'Image 2012 - the international photojournalism festival, held annually in Perpignan, France. This is the fifth year Getty Images has supported the festival, reconfirming its commitment to the photojournalism industry as a whole, as well as the emerging and high-calibre talent synonymous with the festival.

Aidan Sullivan, Vice President, Photo Assignments, Editorial Partnerships and Development at Getty Images says: “We are delighted to once again confirm our support of the Visa Pour L'Image festival for a fifth year. Supporting the photojournalism community is of the utmost importance to Getty Images and we have always believed that the festival plays a pivotal role in the ongoing development of the industry. It also provides a vital platform in which to explore the breathtaking work that is being captured by photojournalists around the world each and every day – the festival is more important to us than ever before.”

Getty Images will have a strong presence at the festival, including the announcement of the recipients of the 2012 Grants for Editorial Photography, which aims to showcase and support powerful and inspiring photojournalism projects. The winners will be announced on stage during the evening screening on Thursday 6 September, with the winning recipients showcasing their chosen projects on Friday, 7 September from 3 - 4pm. Since the programme's inception in 2005, Getty Images has awarded over $700,000 to professional photojournalists. Further information on the Getty Images' grants programme can be found online at: www.gettyimages.com/grants

Jean-Francois Leroy, Visa Pour L'Image Festival Director says: “Getty Images once again proves their real support and involvement in photojournalism. In addition to the valuable Getty Images Grants for Editorial Photography, they are once again supporting Visa Pour L'Image and we are very happy to have such a partner on board.”

For the second year in a row, a Reportage by Getty Images' photojournalist has been awarded the coveted City Of Perpignan Remi Ochlik Award, formerly the Young Reporter of Perpignan Award, with this year's title going to Sebastian Liste. Sebastian receives the award for his Urban Quilombo project, which documents life in Galpao da Araujo Barreto – an abandoned chocolate factory in Salvador de Bahia in Brazil, which was home to 130 homeless families before they were evicted last year by the Brazilian government. Sebastian, who is Spanish by birth, has been documenting the community since 2009. Ed Ou received the award last year for his work documenting the Child Soldiers of Somalia.

Reportage by Getty Images' photojournalist Julien Goldstein and Contour photographer Doug Menuez have also been chosen by the festival to exhibit their work. The moving and inspiring exhibitions will focus on the following:

- Kurdistan
Julien Goldstein / Reportage by Getty Images
- Silicon Valley
Doug Menuez / Contour by Getty Images
- Urban Quilombo project
Sebastian Liste/ Reportage by Getty Images

Aidan Sullivan continues: “I am extremely pleased that once again, our photojournalists are being recognised at Visa Pour L'Image by being given the opportunity to showcase their work. I am particularly proud that for the second year in a row, a Reportage by Getty Images' photojournalist has picked up the prestigious Remi Ochlik award and congratulate Sebastian on what is a breathtaking and groundbreaking project.”

In addition to these exhibitions, Getty Images will also have a strong presence at the festival, with several screenings of their photographers' work, as well as conducting daily portfolio review sessions at their stand.

HAVE WOMEN BEEN BETRAYED BY THE ARAB REVOLUTIONS?

Round table hosted by Valérie Toranian,
Editor in Chief of ELLE, and Caroline Laurent-Simon, international reporter on the weekly magazine.

The rise to power of the Islamists in Egypt, the Salafist threat in Tunisia, the adoption of Sharia Law in Libya, arrests and torture in Syria...Eighteen months after the Arab Spring, women, who nevertheless played an active part in the uprisings, are now the being sacrificed on the altar of History. Are their hopes of democracy and equality fading into oblivion? Can Sharia Law be compatible with women's rights? How can women fight back and organise themselves?

Taking part in the debate: intellectuals specialising in the issue and witnesses from Tunisia, Egypt and Libya.

Witnessing the World through Photojournalism

The monthly magazine, DAYS JAPAN, was started on the first anniversary of the Iraq war, March 20, 2004.

8th DAYS JAPAN International Photojournalism Award
Third prize Tadashi Okubo / Yomiuri Shimbun

The speed with which the world is being transformed accelerated at an unprecedented rate from 2011 to 2012. Voices have been raised in nations around the globe, questioning current values and political systems and it was also at this time that Japan was confronted with the disaster at the Fukushima atomic power station.

It is the role of the photojournalist to transmit information concerning the ever-changing world to the general public. In the midst of all this change, they must also ask themselves what stance they should take and one thing that many of photojournalists who have been killed in the course of their work held in common, was a determination to 'transmit the truth'.

Since it was first published in 2004, DAYS JAPAN has considered it its mission to continue the traditional role of photojournalism in monitoring the excesses of those in power. As a result, many of the world's leading photojournalists have praised DAYS JAPAN for being 'one of the few photo journals that will publish the truth that we have witnessed'. At the sametime, large numbers of photographers have taken part in the DAYS JAPAN International Photojournalism Award.

At a time when everybody owns a camera, it is necessary for us to reassess the true value of photojournalism.

Société des Auteurs
des arts visuels
et de l'Image Fixe

*SAIF is a collective rights management society in the field of visual arts : work of architectures photographs, painting, sculptures, etc.
SAIF represents 6000 authors in France, of whom 3500 photographers.
As a non-profit company, the key missions of SAIF are to defend authors' rights, collect and redistribute fees to its members.
To become a member, you have to pay 15,24 euros, corresponding to the share which you acquire in the society. As a member you have the right to participate in SAIF society life and vote at General Meetings.
You can be member of the board of directors or statutes commissions.*

WHY BECOME MEMBER OF SAIF ?

To perceive collective rights remunerations

The rights or remunerations known as collectives can be managed and collected only by one company of authors. With new technologies expansions, it is impossible to control all uses of works. Consequently, French legislator regularly institutes new rights (or royalties) managed collectively by authors companies.

TODAY, THERE ARE FOUR COLLECTIVE REMUNERATIONS :

► THE PRIVATE COPY REMUNERATION

Created in 1985, the private copy remuneration comes to compensate the authorization which is made to each person to realize for his strictly private use copies of authors works. A percentage is collected for the rights-holders on blank supports. At first collected on CD and video, the remuneration extended since 2001 to digital supports as : CD-R, DVD-R, USB flash drives and hard disks drives.

25 % PERCENTAGE OF THE REMUNERATION IS AFFECTED TO CULTURAL ACTIONS, FOR EXAMPLE FESTIVALS.

► THE REPROGRAPHY RIGHT
Remuneration on exchange of photocopying of works reproduced in books or in magazines.

► THE REMUNERATION IN EXCHANGE OF BOOKS LOAN IN LIBRARY
The remuneration is payed half by the french States and half by libraries.

► THE CABLE REMUNERATION
French law instituted that the simultaneous, complete and unchanged cable retransmission of a work may be authorized only through a royalty collection and distribution society.

SAIF can also intervene to manage :

- the resale right : a percentage of the sale (which varies between 0,5 % and 4 %) is collected when an original work is resold by art dealers ;
- reproduction rights (books, posters, press, merchandising...);
- representation rights (audiovisual productions, exhibition...).

SAIF's scope of activity covers not only France but the whole world, through its network of foreign sister societies which oversee members' rights on their territories. Reciprocally, SAIF manages foreign societies' repertoires in France. Users of works can thus clear all rights with only one organization. SAIF is represented in a wide number of foreign countries thanks to representation agreements signed with its sister societies.

Founded in 1997, iTribu has succeeded in becoming THE reference in the distribution of Apple products in the Languedoc-Roussillon region. It has three points of sale, a staff of 18 and more than 3,000 customers.

iTribu, 100% Apple

The region's leading Apple Premium Reseller and Authorised Service Centre, iTribu is fully authorised and certified by Apple, thanks to its dynamic and expert team. iTribu works with a broad clientele of private individuals, small and medium-sized enterprises and industries, professional and creative people who greatly appreciate the welcome that they receive.

iTribu & Visa pour l'Image, the international festival of photojournalism Specialised in creative professions

With more than 15 years of expertise in creative fields, it is perfectly natural for iTribu to choose to participate in Visa pour l'Image for the second year running. It wishes to share with this professional public the latest innovations in solutions, software and equipment in a professional environment devoted to the world of photography and images. This is centred on a programme of meetings and workshops.

Visa pour l'Image • Perpignan,* a worldwide truth time

Since the festival Visa pour l'Image • Perpignan has been created, the city of Perpignan has been its most important and unfailing support as financial and logistical level. On the other side, this festival highly contributes to the international radiance of the town by attracting a wide international audience of professionals and passionate viewers and by generating substantial financial feedbacks.

Visa pour l'Image • Perpignan mobilised in 2011, 228 888 anonymous viewers, and 3 000 accredited journalists or photographers belonging to 58 nationalities. 7 800 pupils tutored by their teachers also visited the exhibitions during the third week among them students coming from all the universities of the region Languedoc-Roussillon, Midi-Pyrénées or South Catalonia.

Among these figures, Visa pour l'Image • Perpignan turns Perpignan into a real mirror of the world through the various photo-reportings exhibited in the masterpieces of the town's architectural heritage, including the Théâtre de l'Archipel designed by the famous architect Jean Nouvel and the Camp Santo the cloister cemetery, where the main projections take place.

This often tragic mirror of the world is an appeal to the press freedom and to democracy, which are so offended and injured everywhere. We must remind the courage of the photojournalists, because it leads you to reject any kind of renouncement and betrayal of our sacred values.

Among the numerous prestigious prizes awarded every year, I am very proud to have had the opportunity to crown last year the photojournalist Remy Ochlik with the prize of the City of Perpignan. He was killed by covering the upheavals in Syria. Visa pour l'Image • Perpignan confirms its calling, which is to reveal the truth.

I wish you all a nice festival!

VISA pour l'image – Perpignan - 2012 -

VISA pour l'image ... is the major event for all the passionates of life seen through photographs reports.

During a fortnight, this international event draws to Perpignan the most famous reporters who travel around the world witnessing on its exploits, wars, and natural disasters.

For this new edition, it will be an entire city and region beating at the rhythm of the world news actuality. Once again, the exhibitions will “storm” the most prestigious or unusual places in the city.

While reporters, photographs, agencies managers and all other visitors will discover the restaurants, hotels and also the Perpignan's and the Pyrénées-Orientales' retail. It is a considerable surge of potential customers for local economy during the middle season.

In 1989, the Chamber of commerce and industry of Perpignan and Pyrénées-Orientales, with other institutions, took part in the creation of this event called VISA pour l'image.

Today, the Chamber keeps supporting this major event that fits perfectly in its policy of commercial development for the city centre around original and federating actions.

Emotions, revolutions, tears and laughs, etc., I wish this edition of VISA pour l'image fulfilled once again its missions: to make of Perpignan “the centre of the world” seen through a picture.

Jean-Pierre Navarro,
Président de la Chambre de commerce et d'industrie de Perpignan et des Pyrénées-Orientales.

A window on the world, the Visa pour l'image international festival of photojournalism bears testimony to the political, social, economic and environmental evolution of our times.

Let it be the opportunity to thank the photojournalists for their point of view and constant vigil.

These professionals, by alerting us of the permanent dangers of this century, call out to us and entrust us with a heavy responsibility: to never avert our eyes and to continue to act for a better world.

It has given me great pride to be a part of this festival for several years now and to encourage its activities in favour of secondary school students.

Through its organisation of a third week dedicated exclusively to the school population, Languedoc-Roussillon Region is once again demonstrating its commitment to the education of the adults and decision-makers of tomorrow.

The Region would also like to highlight the work accomplished by the professionals and it is precisely for this reason that it will award the Visa d'or in the Magazine category, which rewards the best reports produced during the year.

It is thanks to such events that Pyrénées-Orientales department and our entire region shine beyond their borders!

Welcome to all those come to Languedoc-Roussillon for the Visa festival.

The best of experiences to everyone!

Christian BOURQUIN
Président de la Région Languedoc-Roussillon
Sénateur

The Photo Labs

Visa pour l'Image photographic laboratories - our key partners working behind the scenes. The Festival would not be what it is today if we had not had the invaluable contribution of the photo labs over the past twenty-four years. Their unfailing support, loyalty, commitment, devotion and professionalism have created the showcase for the festival producing one of its finest distinctive features. We wish to express our sincere gratitude to all the gifted people behind the scenes, working with us as we go through the stories of the world, from year to year, from festival to festival.
